Description

Black and white drawing in a reddish-brown wooden frame. Graphite on paper. The foreground is covered in roughly rendered high grass (or crops); six plant stalks on the right are depicted with greater detail. In the midground, a long stone wall runs the length of the drawing, linking up with a wooden fence near the very edge of the left side. Several trees and bushes stand along both sides of the wall. In the background, behind the fence/wall, there is a line of wooden structures. On the left, a cluster of three buildings, including large barn with a stone foundation and a nearby haystack. In the center, a stone foundation building with a chimney pipe and what may be a bell tower. On the right, a house with a chimney pipe and an extension (or potentially separate building) coming off the left side. Two tall trees stand to the right of the house. A water pump is situated in the yard, in the center of all these buildings. Text at bottom reads "Residence of Reuben Lowell, Richmondville, Schoharie County, NY." Dated: December 9, 1890
