Description

In this photograph, Edward Garretson uses a stretching apparatus to treat a medical problem that caused his arms to go to sleep. Edward visited many doctor's about the problem, and one suggested using this apparatus. He used it for 5 minutes, twice a day. Edward states that it did help, however when he bought a silo unloader the problem "was solved." The silo unloader saved him from performing all the steps of feeding the cows including getting the feed out of the silo, into the cart and then to the cows.
